1 Waiting to be Discovered

Jeremy Collins

Medium: Paint

In 2010, a bulldozer working at Ziegler Reservoir thumped into the tusk of a prehistoric mammoth, which led to the discovery of thousands of bones in the site of a former glacial lake. After learning about the discovery, Jeremy envisioned what it was like to be immersed in the dirt beneath the surface at Ziegler Reservoir. In his mural, Jeremy transports viewers down into the depths of Snowmass' fossil-filled soil through depicting the skeletons of the various animals discovered there. Explore the mural to find the bones of an Ice Age Horse, fish, birds, beavers and more.

2 Standing Bear

Unknown Artist

Medium: Wood

This bear has been standing on the Snowmall Mall for many, many years. Although the artist is unknown, the 'Standing Bear' has been admired and hugged by children of all ages.

3 Snowmastodon

Bunnie Reiss

Medium: Paint

Bunnie Reiss imagined a whimsical scene from Snowmass in the Pleistocene era. Inspired by the nickname that scientists gave this project, Snowmastodon, Bunnie created a mastodon covered in ice and snow. Although mastodons haven't lived here for 140,000 years, many of the same aspen, fir, and oak species surround us today

8 Out on a Limb

Steve Blanchard
Medium: Wood

Carved out of old growth redwood, which is hard to come by in today's environment and is very expensive. The artist is currently doing a lot of stump carvings in the Monterey, CA area using some of the many trees that have died because of the drouts. He says his carving skills are a gift from his Lord Jesus.
